We Are Here

Gifty Dzenyo is a Ghanaian photographer based in London, who is passionate about showing the beauty of skin colour and capturing narratives in a creative way. Having studied photography in college 9 years ago she discovered her own path. Gifty has an attention to detail and aims to capture people with an authentic and unique approach.

As a creative, being able to communicate a story and convey a message is something that is important to her. Gifty's work always captures a narrative that is relatable and authentic to different people. Her images are about Black women being present and visible in day-to-day life. She explores the attributes of a Black woman, and the beauty of her Black features and skin.

Gifty is inspired by the Black women around her, who are successful, radiant, consistent, delicate, and integral. Black women deserve a space at the table, Black women deserve respect, and Black women ought to love every inch of themselves and be accepted just as they are.

This body of work is to inspire every Black woman to love their skin, their features and their selves completely. We do not just 'exist' but we thrive.
